When there's some super bug out there floating around. But when you shut down schools, you don't just shut down schools, you shut down parents, right? You shut down businesses. You start shutting down all sorts of things. Huge decision! So, you use a game to start playing out the consequences, and the interactions of all those consequences. We did a game for our board of Institute of Civil Justice where they wanted to focus very narrowly on questions of legal liability. Let's say a genetically engineered pathogen escapes containment and causes one of these outbreaks. Who is responsible? Who actually has legal liability for the consequences? Is it the lab? Is it the government funder for the research that produced it? Table from Horseshoes and Hand Grenades, a section of HACKERS' WARS: How the FBI, Pentagon, NATO and technologists staged the Arab Spring and resulting coups and wars, Or: How I Learned to Worry and Stop Loving the Arab Spring: an argument in favor of cyber realism by Joanna Bell, M.A.

Table Abstract

Hackers' Wars is a draft of a working paper arguing that the Arab Spring and its resulting coups and wars across the Middle East were orchestrated by US law enforcement, intelligence, and the military establishment with the willing and knowing cooperation of hacker groups like Anonymous, big technology companies, major media outlets and major policy institutions. It makes the argument that the Arab Spring of 2011 was irregular warfare orchestrated by the US against Arab societies.

This table is part of the chapter Out of the Blue: Wargames and Wars, from the section Horseshoes and Hand Grenades which argues that real world events are exact recreations of wargames scenarioed years earlier in war colleges, think tanks, and intelligence reports.

In the section on wargaming, the reader is informed of US military irregular warfare policy. The significance of discussing military wargaming is to show in three points that:

- 1) Tech companies and protesters did not act alone but alongside the Pentagon and the rest of the US intel-security state which is regularly conducting irregular warfare as official policy;
- 2) Wargaming is a misnomer - wargames are in fact practice for definite future military involvement or may act as cover for simultaneous real military action, and;
- 3) Wargames/continuous simulated warfare act as continuous real irregular warfare and constitute a state of war.

I am suggesting here in the section Out of the Blue: Wargames and Wars that many of those in the US policymaking and wargaming industries - especially those that have a hand in both - are disruptive actors employing irregular warfare with the willingness to recreate catastrophic events in the US as they have done abroad under the guise of scenario-based policy planning and wargaming.
